MOTHER BELIEVES HAUPTMANN INNOCENT

(Copyright 1935 by I. N. S.)

KOMENZ, GERMANY, Feb. 14.—Torn by the sorrow and strain of the dramatic trial and shocked at news of the death sentence, Frau Pauline Hauptmann could not find it in her mother's heart to believe what four women on the jury believed: that her boy took the life of a baby.

"I cannot believe it," she sobbed, when she was awakened, white-faced, at dawn to hear the Flemington, N. J., verdict.

"No! My son is not guilty; the guilty ones are the people who wanted to convict him. I am sure Richard did not do what they said. He loved his little boy, Mannfried, so much he could never treat a child so badly, he would always have his own son in mind. No! No!" she repeated over and over again, "I cannot believe it."

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Feb. 14—(INS)—Bruno Richard Hauptmann—sentenced to die in the electric chair the week of March 18 next—was in a distraught state in his cell here today. His "iron" nerves finally gave way and he wept.

Hours after a jury of eight men and four women found him guilty of the murder of the Lindbergh baby, he lay face down on his cot, sobbing and muttering phrases in German.

He did not quake during those tense and dramatic moments when the jury said "guilty." Nor when the Judge pronounced the death sentence. Then, with the world spotlight upon him, he "took it" like the soldier he once was. But, alone in his cell, with the vision of the electric chair haunting him, he broke down.

Hauptmann's counsel said they would appeal the verdict and sentence to the highest court in the land, if necessary. But for Hauptmann this is small solace. He has lost confidence. He plainly sees the handwriting on the wall and it spells "death."

A strange figure this man Hauptmann was as he stood pale-faced and erect in the court room at 10:45 o'clock last night and heard himself sentenced to die a little over a month from now. That was "New Jersey justice," operating full speed.

That scene in the court room when Hauptmann's doom was sealed will never be forgotten by eye-witnesses. It was packed with drama. It shook the nerves of all who saw it.

Hauptmann took one look. It seemed to be enough for him, too. For a fraction of a second an expression of fear swept his face. Then he stared straight ahead—and waited.

And what a wait it was. The minutes went by. The jury was in the box. The State Police in their bright blue uniforms were stationed in strategic spots all over the court room. The reporters were ready to "flash" the verdict. The seconds seemed minutes. A dramatic hush pervaded the tiny court room.

Finally, the kindly-faced, distinguished-looking Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, in his flowing black robes, ascended the bench. You could almost hear the ticking of the court house clock. Defense Attorney Lloyd Fisher gently placed a reassuring hand on Hauptmann's shoulder and whispered something in his ear. Hauptmann didn't budge. Nor did he answer Fisher.

Outside, the motion picture flares, shooting up a greenish-red flame, illuminated the walls of the hall of records to the right of the court room. Troopers pulled down the shades. The hubbub of the crowd in the streets accentuated the weirdness of it all.

Justice Trenchard looked down from the bench and nodded to C. Lloyd Fell, the little gray-haired county clerk. Fell read the names of the jury. Each juror answered to his or her name. The voices of the men jurors were

IS HEAVILY GUARDED

TRENTON, Feb. 14—(INS)—A partially obliterated inscription is scrolled over the main entrance of the New Jersey State Prison here, which the visitor guesses is "Abandon Hope all ye, who enter here."

Bruno Richard Hauptmann could not tarry long enough at the gate to read it. Those who are brought here are hurried within the walls.

One hundred and ten men have passed between the massive red-brown stone columns. Egyptian in style, in the entrance under the inscription, to travel "the last mile."

In the 25 years since the electric chair was installed, no woman has been executed in it.

The little green door between the death room and the murderers' has swung open for numerous criminals whose notoriety was natural. They have gone to death in fours, in twos and singly.

Robert Elliott, of New York, has been the executioner for the last 15 years. Four slayers of a paymaster of the Reid Ice Cream Co., in Newark; four who killed a Public Service Corp. cashier, and Danny Gross, the New York gunman who was last of the famous mail truck robbery gang in Elizabeth died when Elliott pulled the switch here.

The execution room, located on the Third street side, about 500 yards from the main entrance of the prison.

Three Ice Boats to Break Jam in Upper Delaware

Three Philadelphia ice boats are scheduled today to go to Trenton and break the ice jam in the upper Delaware River. This end of the river was broken Tuesday when the ice boat came up the river. The ice breaker came up again yesterday and was accompanied by a tug. The ice in the river opposite here is getting away in good style.

Harold G. Hoffman, governor of New Jersey, yesterday approved the breaking up of the stream at the expense of New Jersey. The request for state aid on the project was made by Arthur W. Dover, manager of the Port of Trenton.

It was agreed that the ice-clogged river not only hampered commerce but actually presented an imminent danger to property along the stream.

The cost of the ice breakers is estimated at between $500 to $1000.

The city of Philadelphia will furnish the ice-breakers "John Weaver," "Paul Reso," "Rachel Smith," "grade eight," "Betty Jean Garlits," "Marian Hunt," "John Wanamaker" and "Iceboat No. 2."

Bucks Real Estate Board Hears Talk On 'Taxation'

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 14—Bucks County Real Estate Board meeting in the Doylestown Inn, last evening, was attended by 50 people. The presiding officer was Jacob Horn, Perkasie.

The speaker of the evening introduced by Hugh B. Eastburn, Bristol, was Franklin Spencer Edmonds, a well-known Montgomery County attorney. Mr. Edmonds took up the general subject of "Taxation," and for one hour went over points of interest in this line. The mounting cost of government was spoken of, and comparisons given between the systems of taxation in America and those of other countries. "Unnecessary" taxes were also referred to, and at the conclusion of the address the men assembled participated in a half hour of discussion.

Among the prominent Bucks County present were: Judge Hiram H. Keller, district attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, and county commissioners Norman Reitsnyder and John S. Roberts, Jr.

Among the scout troops represented were Bristol No. 1, No. 2, No. 7, Newville, and past members of the boy scouts in a number of old camp songs.

The occasion was a spaghetti dinner given by the "Sea Scout Ship Elks."

Following the dinner the scouts were entertained with musical numbers by Leonard Herman, Russell Johnson, Melvin Johnson, Arnold North, John Ellis, Martin Van Beveren, George Heaton, Harry Smith, and Carl Pfeifer, all of whom are at present or at one time were members of the boy scouts. Norman Hetherington led the scouts in a number of old camp songs.

The supper was served by the mothers and friends of the Sea Scouts.

"It was splendid—I haven't seen anything more impressive or better than the Eagle Scout Ceremony," said Judge Calvin S. Boyer, while he was making the statistical report of the County Court of Honor conducted Sunday afternoon in the Court House at Doylestown, during the Bucks County Council Executive Board meeting, Monday evening at the Doylestown Inn.

Judge Boyer further said, "During the Court of Honor I endeavored to imagine what would have been my reactions if I had had the same opportunity to receive awards, as were being given when I was a boy. I decided I would have certainly advanced. I couldn't have resisted the desire for achievement when I knew it was to be recognized for devoted effort by such a ceremony. I am delighted with the Merit Badge Sash Award. It was one of the finest presentations. It means a lot to a boy to have his father interested enough in him to assist him in accumulating the necessary knowledge, and to also be the one to bestow the sash. I was delighted with the affection shown their mothers by the new Eagle Scouts."

President Ross appointed a special committee of Scout Commissioner William Burgess, as chairman, Arthur M. Eastburn, Edward Fell, A. R. Hendricks and Henry Palmer to survey the swimming facilities at Buccon Camps with the purpose of recommending a definite program of improvement to make possible life saving instruction.

"Buccon Camp is again going to be

A DAY FOR SENTIMENT

There are many customs connected with dates and seasons that were once full of grace and charm and good humor, but lost them in the dark days when legends came into contempt. Valentine's Day was made something of a folk festival long ago, for its observance is suggested in Chaucer and recorded in great variety in early English literature. The practical Pepys makes mention of it in 1667, remarking that "I am this year my wife's valentine, and it will cost me five pounds but that I must have laid out if we had not been valentines."

But vulgarity spoiled the day and its observance, and it is only lately coming from under a cloud. Its legends are lost or neglected, but it begins now to recover the custom of harmless sentiment or is made the occasion for pledges of affection and friendly nonsense of greeting. Flowers are suited to its service, or fancies that might suit a lady's lighter moods. Sweethearts, of course, will take it as seriously as lovers of long ago, though they will not follow old example by staying indoors and keeping eyes shut until the right valentine is at hand.

No legend is needed to justify an occasion for gifts of good will and gay or graceful greetings. This is a good day to make small pledges of large affections, to contrive surprises and to anticipate the mood of spring in the last days of winter. So much of old Valentine's Day is worth keeping, and on these terms it will be widely honored even in this sober century.

TOURISTS EMBARRASS
MISSIONARIES

Among the hardships of a missionary career is the task of making excuses for the inconsistent conduct of American tourists. So says Rev. Merlin A. Chappell, who has been a missionary in various foreign fields.

Missionaries are not alone subject to such embarrassment. American citizens who establish residence and make friends and acquaintances abroad, usually take pardonable pride in upholding the tradition that Americans are a cultured, refined, well-mannered people.

What is their chagrin when along come parties of American tourists, who because they are away from home, think it unnecessary to be on good behavior! And it is traditional that an American not on good behavior is pretty badly behaved anywhere.

Maybe it would be a good objective to spend some of the missionary money trying to teach our own countrymen that Americans have something of a reputation to maintain when they mingle with other people, heathen or otherwise.

CHAPTER XXXII

She rose restlessly and approached the window. There, pacing up and down the beach, was Mark. The prau was drawn up on the sand, its oarsmen lounging beside it, and in the bay lay the Kermadec, with seamen at work on its deck. Back and forth strode Mark, his eyes bent on the sand.

He looked up, gazed directly at the window where she was standing. She saw him pause, draw his watch from his pocket, and regard it meaningfully. Cruel gesture of warning! On an impulse she loosed the bow that bound her robe, spread it wide with both arms. Like a flame in the window, the scarlet blouse of her dancing costume flashed in the sun. Mark saw it; he turned his back and stared out over the blue waves of the Pacific.

"It came about this way, if you're so bound to have it: I accused her of adopting this attitude of refusal for trading purposes—to drive a better bargain, and I told her I couldn't give her what she wanted, meaning marriage. And she agreed with me. That's plain enough, isn't it?"

"But did you mention marriage specifically?"

"No, I didn't. What else could the remark mean? Can you figure out another meaning?"

"Yes," said Loring. "I can. And so could you if you weren't blinded by your prejudices."

"I'd like to hear it!"

"Did you," interrupted the derrick, "ever happen to tell the lady that you loved her? Did it occur to you that it might—just conceivably—make a difference to her?"

"No, I don't think it," said Mark dazedly. "But good Heavens, Loring!"

"That's the term I used. Love, affection, amour, or whatever you choose to call it."

"But why?"

"Did you," interrupted the derrick, "ever happen to tell the lady that you loved her? Did it occur to you that it might—just conceivably—make a difference to her?"

"No, I don't think it," said Mark dazedly. "But good Heavens, Loring!"

"I can guess what you're going to say," he announced. "We've been saying how your actions are a little paradoxical. I can faintly imagine her doubting it."

"I know!" You mean she should have realized it. But sometimes, comrade, your actions are a little paradoxical. I can faintly imagine her doubting it."

"I'm not," he boomed. "I'm going to tell you something, by way of friendly parting. I want to tell you that Pearly Shene is sorry to be losing you."

"Thank you," said Vanya tonelessly. She was too disturbed, too chaotically upset to bother making Shene an explanation. Let him find out this evening, when the men of the Kermadec come ashore! And let him watch her take whatever invitations were called to her! She knew the crew of the Kermadec. Their requests might not be exactly polite, but at least they'd furnish her with a vicious revenge on Mark. She made as if to pass on.

Shene rumbled again in his basso profundo tones.

"Hong and I been talking about you," he announced. "We been saying how the place will be different with you gone. These others we got ain't the same type as you."

Vanya made no answer. She stared mechanically at the tables gray with dust, the chairs, now empty, but soon to be filled with the boisterous forms of seamen on shore leave. The room was dusky, for the afternoon sun was behind the building; darkness would arrive very soon now, and with it the men of the pearlring vessel.

She moved again toward the door, when Shene rumbled once more.

"Just a word o' goodbye to Hong and me," he growled with an attempt at an amiable smile. "You ain't going without a word!"

Was the man leading up to something? Vanya wondered disinterestedly; whatever it might be, it had no importance to her. Nothing could ever be important now. Mark was leaving, and with him the dim glow of happiness, that had gleamed at her occasionally during these last few weeks, was dying forever.

"I guess so," he said bluntly.

"Then let me remind you that there are also certain less pleasant words."

"Do you mean," asked Mark in a low voice, "that you think I'd have—I might have been guilty of seduction? Her first love?"

"Think? I know!"

"And how do you know?"

"Common sense, Comrade. Don't you think the opportunities for dalliance on the primrose path are as great in Shene's Cove as at Singapore or Canton? Or a bit greater?"

"By the way," said Loring, "how do you know she wants marriage?"

"She said so, of course."

"She did? That—somehow—doesn't sound like Vanya. If her reason had been as simple as that, she'd have known it long ago."

"Well, for once, then, you're wrong."

"American men are shy," says a French actress, now playing in New York. It must be on account of some past experience with war heroes, cherie.

"Lord," said Mark softly. "Lord, I want to believe you, Loring!"

HIBERNIANS WIN DOUBLE-HEADER

The Bristol Hibernians travelled to Trevose on Monday night and took both ends of a double-bill from the Trevose quintets. In the first game, the Reserves topped Trevose 38-22 while in the second match, Trevose fell on the short end of a 33-31 score.

"Johnny" Cole led the assault of the Hibs in the main battle scoring eight field goals as part of his pivot playing. The winning goals of this fray were scored by "Eddie" Roe. E. Flack was the best for Trevose.

DUSEK ADDS NAME OF RASCHER TO LIST

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 14—Emil Dusek added the name of Andy Rascher to his list of arena wrestling victims last night, but there were plenty of anxious moments for the Nebraska "bad boy" before he finally accomplished a straight-fall victory.

Dusek pinned the Rascher shouter to the mat in the first fall after one hour and 41 minutes of hectic grappling. The second fall had a different ending. Dusek cleverly sidestepped a vicious flying butt by his opponent, and Rascher went sailing through the ropes into the first row of spectators. Knocked unconscious by the impact of his head on a chair, Andy was counted out by Referee Frank Simborn, of Camden. The time of the second fall was 11:24.

Although Rascher was beaten, he had Dusek in plenty of trouble throughout the match. The men were out of the ring almost as much as inside, and the fans were frazzled throughout.

Pat McClary, 250-pound Irishman, gave an amazing display of strength in the semi-windup. Paying no attention to the even more massive bulk of 267-pound "We Willie" Davis, Pat proceeded to throw his man in 15:58. McClary flipped the huge Davis back and forth with ease that spoke volumes of praise for the Hibernian's strength.

Al Bisignano, always a favorite with the fans here, drew salvos of applause from the fans as he pinned Blue Sun Jennings, the Indian football star, in 22:27.

The opening bout on the program lasted only one minute and 41 seconds as Referee Simborn disqualified John Swank, Polish inciter of ill feeling, for using his knee on Ricardo Santos, Spanish grappler.

at the 1840 meeting was to the effect that all absent members from annual meetings be fined in accordance with the letter and spirit of the constitution and the directors are hereby ordered to collect the same."

At the annual meeting, 1839, a motion was in order that each and every member furnish the secretary with a description of all their horses within ten days from this date. Spencer W. Buckman's name appears on the list as one of the judges of election in 1841, and at the same meeting the name of Samuel Satterwhite appears as one of the directors. The number of directors has advanced from three to five. The annual payments were reduced from fifty cents to twenty-five cents.

The treasurer now reported a balance of $121.59. The names of James Stackhouse and William B. Gilliland appear on the 1844 minutes. Chalky Albertson's right of membership has now been transferred to William Balderston, and Josiah Comfort, 1848, was appointed one of the judges of election, and John W. Bailey was duly elected one of the directors. In 1850 it was declared that all dues be raised to the original 50 cents and all members who attend the annual meeting, to be entitled to their supper, to be paid of the funds of the Company, and no excuse for non-attendance to be considered valid except sickness."

The name Mahlon B. Janney appears on the 1851 minutes, and George Comfort in 1852. Andrew Moon, long proprietor of the upper general merchandise store here, adds his name in 1853, as one of the directors, which position he held for a number of years. At this meeting a resolution reads: "Resolved, by the meeting, that, in future, and until otherwise ordered, new members shall pay two dollars for admission into this Company. Joseph Headley and Peter Williamson were admitted members."

The treasurer reported a balance of $270.36. George C. Wright was admitted as a new member. In 1855, the names of Alexander Lynn, Isaac S. Eastburn, James Sickles, and Benjamin P. Brown appear on the minutes. The minutes of the annual meetings continue through 1866, additional membership featuring their progress.

Annual Valentine Dance Is Sure To Attract Many

The third annual Valentine dance, semi-formal, to be held in St. Ann's auditorium, on February 20th, promises to be a huge success. Great enthusiasm is being shown, and plans are going along splendidly.

Famous music of a famous orchestra will be the feature of the evening. Musical satisfaction to the utmost is assured.

The hall has been beautifully decorated in a Valentine atmosphere. Dim lights and soft music will surely capture all hearts. Refreshments will be on sale.
